GEN. GRANT was to arrive in San Francisco, Thursday. The boom is rather flat.

HON. ALEX. STEPHENS, of Georgia, is visiting Louisville, and a public reception was given him at the Exposition, on which occasion he made an address, and Louisville is now happy!

The present revival of trade is but the beginning of that era. Let us all cease grumbling, and, taking advantage of the better times, help to bring about a realization of that condition of prosperity which the near future promises.

NATCHEZ, Mississippi, has built a cotton factory in the past two years, every dollar of the stock being owned at home, and it is said that the return on the investment is now nearly 20 per cent.

JAY GOULD has given Memphis $10,000, and tells the Howards to go ahead and he will foot the bill. All honor to Jay Gould, for doing what the State of Tennessee ought to have done. It is a happy fortune to have the wealth of a prince, but a far happier fortune to be moved to use it like a prince, as Jay Gould has done in this instance.

Personal Journalism.
The editor of the News is deemed an "old fogey," and decidedly behind the age of newspaper progress, because he does not kindly take to the new departure in journalism, in the matter of "Society Gossip," "Personal Items," &c. Well, be it so—we plead guilty to the "soft impeachment," and are intent to be classed as "behind the age," in this, to us, distasteful method of dishing up the news for an intelligent and reflecting community. We cannot lend ourselves to the belief that it is the current province of a public newspaper to advertise the movements and actions of private citizens in their daily walk through life. We see no just reason to parade the names of modest ladies incessantly before the public in matters purely domestic or social. nor are we willing to cater to the "silly" desire to be a corrupt and vitiated taste—a morbid desire to inflate conceited egotism into undue importance, and fill up our columns with a series of trashy "personal items" of no earthly social information to the sensible reader, to the exclusion of more valuable reading. In our view, the public newspaper should be devoted to the promulgation of an intelligence pertaining to public affairs, public men, and history that walks the highway—not to the private motives or acts of men and women who desire no notoriety and court no fulsome public parade of their actions.—[Henderson News.]

Just right, and these "personal items" are run into sheer taffy, disgraceful to the editorial profession. The conscience of an editor ought not to be to entirely desecrated—even if he does publish a paper in a small town, and yet all this trashy society gossip is a mixture of taffy, taffy and downright lying. For instance, men who are known to be dishonest—who couldn't buy a beef-steak on credit—must be noted as our "worthy fellow country man visited the city yesterday," or women, who are remarkable only for their homeliness, are chronicled as the "charming, beautiful and accomplished," &c., &c. What would be thought of an editor who would thus follow the movements and actions of citizens in their daily walks of life, and in advertising the same always tell the truth and nothing but the truth? For instance, how pleasant would this "personal" read:

"The homely and silly Miss Sallie Smith, after several weeks' visit to relatives, returned home Wednesday."

Or, what would be the result, if such a paragraph as the following should appear in the COURIER:

"John Smith, a backwoods circuit rider, preached a sermon at the — church last Sunday evening, that tired most of his audience, and put several of his congregation to snoring."

It might be the truth, and, certainly, if an editor writes about anything, he should write the truth, and yet such paragraphs would give offense! In matters purely social and domestic, it always struck us as bad taste to continually parade the names of modest ladies and girls thus before the public. We think the papers of this day are mistaken in assuming that the educated public sentiment demands such gossip as news, but if public sentiment does demand such and newspapers have to cater to it, why proper sentiment must agree that the papers should so word such paragraphs as to keep within the bounds of truth. For our part, we've never been to Congress, robbed a bank, or murdered any one, and claim only to be reasonably honest, but we are now too old to lie about such small things. It's the fashion, however, and many good papers indulge in whole columns of such matter; but it always reads to us like a waste of space and a lowering of the dignity of the profession, and a benefit to one.

THE PRESIDENTS.
Who Will be the Nominees.

We incline to the opinion that Jno. Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, will be the next Republican nominee for President. The business boom and return of prosperity, whether attributable to the financial management of the Government or not, is none the less a conceded fact, and the Republicans will attempt to ride to a re-election on the boom. The people have been staggering under hard times so long, and have been taught by so many to look to the Government for relief, that now, that prosperous times seem to be fairly set in, it will be easier to make it appear as the result of Mr. Sherman's good efforts as the financial officer and manager of the Government. But for this wave of returning prosperity the Republicans would be forced to nominate Grant for a third term, in order to more effectually keep alive the old war sentiment of the North. Grant, really don't seem to court the nomination, and there are reasons for believing him sincere. If Grant should court the nomination, his great would excite the opposition of the great leaders of the Republican party, who, themselves, can't relish always being set aside for this great colossus. The great leaders of the Republicans are willing to provide for Grant in any way to suit his ambition, for life, but they want him retired so they themselves can have a chance. Hence, the ex-President can't afford antagonizing these influences, for if he should, and then fail, he would lose all. The great contingency that would defeat Sherman for the Republican nomination, is in a state of affairs which may show that Senator Conkling is the only Republican who can carry the great State of New York. If circumstances should occur to make it appear that the vote of New York was all-essential to Republican success, the probabilities would be that Conkling would be the Republican nominee. Senator Blaine, who was the popular favorite of the Republicans in 1876, don't seem to stand much chance this time. Some of the New England States will go for him, but the Southern States, where he received his most enthusiastic vote in 1876, are now doubtful, for Sherman.

As to who will be the Democratic nominee for President the outlook is not so clear, because it manifestly depends upon future contingencies which no man can now read. Tilden is unquestionably the most prominent figure, and but for the refusal of Mr. Hendricks—in advance—to take the second place again, the whole country with almost a solid thought and shout would turn to the old ticket—Tilden and Hendricks. But the attitude of Mr. Hendricks—the Western Democracy renders the old ticket an impossibility. The split in New York has Tilden's fate in the balance. If, in the approaching State elections, the Tildenites should demonstrate their ability to carry New York by a large majority over both the Republicans and the Tammany Democracy, then the defeat of Tilden for a re-nomination would be almost an impossibility. If, however, they fail to carry New York Tilden will no more be thought of. After this contingency, the next probable nominee would be Bayard or Thurman. If Bayard, then Ewing or some other Western man for vice President. Mr. Hendricks, though the popular favorite among Democrats in 1876 for the first place, don't appear now to be talked of conspicuously. In addition to the regular Democratic and Republican tickets, there will no doubt be a Greenback nominee for President, and probably a prohibition and temperance candidate, and possibly, tickets representing other issues. General Butler will most likely be the Greenback nominee for President.

In 1880, as in the past, the great struggle will be between the two leading tickets—the Republican and the Democratic. The other tickets will be mere side shows, intended by their leaders to injure the Democratic or Republican ticket. In some States, for instance, the Greenbacks may carry strength enough to give a State to the Republicans, and in others to the Democrats, &c. Let all this go as it may, if the Democracy can be harmonized and united, we have the majority of the American people on our side, as is proven by the election in 1876, and can win if we will.

There is a great organized movement among English mechanics for emigration to this country. The skilled artisans especially are interested. This is a subject that should claim the attention of the eight hour debating societies of this country—also of the Socialists and others, who are of the opinion that we are all in a miserable and down-trodden state.

Local Hints and Facts.
Editor Courier—Believing that you are a friend to the people of this county and like to see them elevated in any honest way, peculiarly or otherwise, it might not be out of the way for me to say a few words in relation to two or three of the products of this county in my uneducated and very plain way. I noticed in the COURIER a few weeks ago some advice to the people of this county about their apples. I certainly know that the people of this county make a great mistake in putting up apples for this or any other market. They nearly always pull their apples green and mix good and bad together. And it has got to be too much of a custom in this county to put a few good apples in each end of the barrel and fill up the balance of it with any kind of fruit. Dealers are the best judges of fruit, and they examine it very minutely and find all defects, and the consequences are that fruit buyers have about quit coming to Hickman to buy fruit, and the Hickman fruit market has got a bad name in other markets—so the people of this county realize but little for fruit. If a man has fifty barrels of apples and only ten of them are good, he should select the ten, and by no means send the forty bad barrels to bad ones. It will not pay; feed the poor apples to hogs or make cider or vinegar of them.

The sorghum molasses market of this county is injured fully as much as apple market. Most of the people that raise sorghum commence to put the cane and make molasses about a month or so. Molasses made in that way cannot have a pleasant taste, and when the weather gets warm in the spring it will sour, no difference in what you must feed it. So it must be forced on the market before the weather gets warm, and sold at some price, much or little. There are great mistakes made in taking care of the molasses made in this county. All the old barrels are gathered up; oak barrels are not fit to put any kind of molasses in. If you would make a Louisiana sugar planter a present of oak barrels, he would not use them for his molasses. They use cypress barrels, because their molasses will sour in oak barrels. Sorghum molasses is of the same nature. An old cypress barrel that has had molasses in it will do it if it is well washed out. If a man will let his sorghum get good and ripe and make his molasses with care, and put it in a cypress barrel and set it away in a reasonable cool place, it will be as good in a year hence as when made. I speak from experience, for I have tried it. A merchant can afford to buy several barrels of such molasses and keep it until sold, and in that way sorghum would pay the producer.

Sweet potatoes are usually dug when half grown and put on the market at from 25 to 40 cents per bushel, when, if let alone until grown and kept till near Christmas, they would bring from 75 cents to $1 per bushel.

Senator Thurman.
Senator Thurman made a speech at Columbus, O., Saturday night, in which he uttered the following truths: "About every twenty years we have a commercial revolution, which, for brevity's sake, we call a panic; when the country wakes up to the fact that owing to an imprudent extension of credit or bad legislation, or both, it is not able to pay its debts on demand. A long period of suffering, generally five or six years, ensues, and then, having reached the bottom, any change necessarily be for the better, and business begins to revive. Specie payments are resumed, as it is called—that is, paper money and specie come to par. It is not this resumption, so called, that produces a revival of business, but it is a revival of business that produces the resumption. In 1837 one of these panics occurred. In 1857 we had another panic, and its history would have been precisely that of the panic of 1837 had not the civil war occurred. In 1873 came the last panic and, without any resumption, not five or six years, as in former instances, would have brought us back to a revival of industry and a resumption of specie payments, so called."

The election of four Republicans to Congress in California reduces the Democratic majority in the House to nine—enough for all practical purposes, if the members will only attend to their business. If absenteeism is to afflict the House next winter as it did last winter, the Democrats in their various districts in the country ought to erect a gallows or two by way of reminding their Representatives of their duty.

The story book picture of whaling, in which the crew of a vessel are seen from the bow of a boat, are no longer accurate. Of late years the weapon generally used has been a bomb that is fired from a gun and exploded in the whale's body. A new implement of this sort is described as follows: The lance weighs seven and one half pounds and contains one and one quarter pound of gun powder, and is propelled by a heavy rocket. There being no discharge of a heavy gun, the recoil is a push rather than a blow, and the bomb is ignited by the rocket when the latter has burned out. A chain toggle attached to the front end of the rocket is released by the explosion, securely holding the whale, which, if not instantly killed, cannot long survive the explosion.

THE PRESIDENTS.
Who Will be the Nominees.

The Republicans rely on the Green-backers to help them elect a Radical President in 1880.
It has been said that iron is the pulse of commerce. If so, there is life in the land yet, for the iron business is reviving. The iron mills at New York are all running on full time and have orders far ahead to fill, so far, indeed, that they will not enter into propositions for more.

The authorities of Tennessee are doing little or nothing for her sick, dying and needy. The rest of the country must come to the rescue, as usual. Like a tramp who blazes not to beg bread at the back door, but refuses to work, Tennessee sits slothfully and receives from all who will give. Let us not be ungenerous to the needy on that account. The money must be sent.—[Lan. Commercial.]

Tramp's Signs and Habits.
The following are said to be some of the signs and habits of tramps on the posts and trees of farms visited by them: A capital H (Handout) means "come along to eat given at the door." Three perpendicular lines, with a line crossing the three diagonally, means "good for 25 cents." An index hand, "careless people; crib easy to crack." A cross "lookout for dog." Once on the tramp, always on the tramp. The business has its fascinations, although it is a difficult matter to see where the charm comes in. Yet it suits hundreds of men. They care for nobody, and have little to trouble them. The great portion of the tramps now could obtain work if they would quit. The regular tramp in isolated farming communities rarely or ever asks for food unless he has some other object in view. He can steal all the chickens and vegetables he wants. There are no impressions to be made of outside doors. While the unsuspecting farmer's wife is busy getting something to eat out of the pantry, the tramp takes an impression of the door key and a bird's-eye view of the premises. The next night the key, which has been hanging around in the bush, robs the house. As a general rule, there are one or more firemen in each gang. If they can rob a house easily they won't rob the inn.—[Ex.]

Items of Interest.
If, as a writer in a German paper, we reckon that a single grain of wheat produces fifty grains, and that these fifty will each produce fifty grains more, and so on, we find: In the third year 2500 grains. In the third year 2500 grains. In the third year 15,625,000,000 grains. In the 12th year 244,140,625,000,000 grains. The third year's crop would give 30 men one meal, leaving enough bran to feed eight pigs for one day. The produce of the single grain in the twelfth year would suffice to supply all the inhabitants of the earth with food during their lifetime.

A warning concerning the use of balloons, toys, etc., especially those peddled on the street, is thus given by a French journal: "Many of the most virulent diseases of the blood have lately been found to be communicated by this means, as each of these toys must pass through the mouths of three or four workmen before it is finished, and each is usually tried by the vendor while he is making the sale. Skin diseases which have lately spread among the children in Paris and Lyons were proposed by these toys. Mothers should be on their guard to see that they are thoroughly cleansed before use."

The invention of beer as a beverage is ascribed to Osiris, twenty centuries before the Christian era, and it was known to the ancients as wine of bar. In the Middle Ages, the name of the allies of Latin origin drink wine more freely than those of Saxon origin, who consume much beer. The agriculture of European countries is largely influenced by the popular demand for beverages. Within the last two centuries, beer has been rapidly gaining favor in Latin countries. Beer saloons now flourish in Paris, Rome and Madrid, as well as in Berlin, Vienna and Hamburg. In Paris, for example, the annual consumption of beer has risen to over 100,000,000 liters (about 250,000,000 gallons).

Of late years the weapon generally used has been a bomb that is fired from a gun and exploded in the whale's body.
